Nuanced view into the complexities of aging as a transgender person

Representations of older transgender people are nearly absent from our culture and those that do exist are often one-dimensional.

For over five years, photographer Jess T. Dugan and social worker Vanessa Fabbre traveled throughout the United States creating To Survive on This Shore: Photographs and Interviews with Transgender and Gender Nonconforming Older Adults. Seeking subjects whose lived experiences exist within the complex intersections of gender identity, age, race, ethnicity, sexuality, socioeconomic class, and geographic location, they traveled from coast to coast, to big cities and small towns, documenting the life stories of this important but largely underrepresented group of older adults. The featured individuals have a wide variety of life narratives spanning the last ninety years, offering an important historical record of transgender experience and activism in the United States.

The resulting monograph provides a nuanced view into the struggles and joys of growing older as a transgender person and offers a poignant reflection on what it means to live authentically despite seemingly insurmountable odds.

Excerpts from the book:

Gloria, 70, Chicago, IL, 2016

I identify myself as a female. I've always identified myself as a female. From a little tot, I knew who I was then, you know? And people say, "How do you, at an early age, know who you are?" I've always felt that way so that's who I am. The men in my family, they were sort of apprehensive about me, but the women were strong. They wore the pants in my family. My mother would tell them, "This is your child, this is our baby, and you're going to love my baby because you love me." And that's the way it was.

(...)

I'm a senior citizen. I made it to seventy and a lot of them won't make it, they won't make it at all. Because most of them die from drugs, from sexual disease or they're murdered. They ask me questions like, "Well, Momma Gloria, how did you get through?" I say, "I got through with love from my family and the grace of God." That's how I got through. You have to have some stability and you have to have some kind of class, some charm about yourself. I never was in the closet. The only time I was in the closet was to go in there and pick out a dress and come out of the closet and put it on.

Jay, 59, New York, NY

I'm a pretty classic transgender man, as I see it, because from my earliest recollections as a tiny child I experienced myself as a boy in a girl's body. I felt that some dreadful mistake had been made and I didn't get the body I was supposed to. I prayed every night to God to make me wake up a boy the way I was supposed to be. And that orientation never changed throughout the whole trajectory of my life. That said, I was also a political activist, an LGBT activist. For a long time, society identified me as a lesbian and seemed to ignore my transgender status. Back then, in the 1950s and '60s, society wasn't really all that nuanced in how it looked at LGBT people. We were all sort of lumped into the same boat.

Jess T. Dugan is an artist whose work explores issues of identity, gender, sexuality, and community.
